

Honorable Principal, Teachers, and all my dear friends.

Today I am standing in front of you to give a speech on Republic Day. Before moving forward, I would like to wish you all who are present here a Happy Republic Day.

I am so captivated when my class teacher told me some days back that you have been chosen to give a speech on the 26 of January. I am thrilled however a bit nervous as well because I never offered a speech prior in my school life.

As you all know today we have gathered here to mark the auspicious day of Republic day which we as well knew as “Gantantra Divas” and as we all know that on this day in 1950 our full constitution came into effect. Moreover, it was adopted on 26 of November 1949 under the chairmanship of our favourite Dr. Bhim Rao Ambedkar and we all know him as a father of Indian Constitution, he is one of the greatest leaders of modern India at that time.

It’s a Gazetted holiday however schools remain open to organize many programmes in their school just as we are doing. Aspirants presents many cultural activities and sing patriotic songs to remember our freedom fighters and mark the big day.

As our principal sir hoist, the national flag likely, the president of India hoists the flag at Rajpath and each year they invited particular chief guests from a various nation.
